Brush Up on Dental Health Care

Signs of Oral Disease

What are the signs of dental disease in pets?

The American Veterinary Dental College and other dental experts describe these signs:

- Bad breath
- Loss of appetite or weight loss
- Loose or discolored teeth, or teeth covered with tartar
- Facial swelling that may result in pawing at the mouth or pain upon touching your pet's mouth
- Drooling, dropping food, or bleeding from the mouth

Dr. Linda Bohn

Spotlight - Dr. Bohn

Dr. Bohn has practiced small animal medicine and surgery since 1995. She is a great addition to our practice! Dr. Bohn is especially interested in senior wellness, preventive care, and internal medicine. In her spare time, Dr. Bohn enjoys riding her American Paint Horse, "Cottoncandy Cowboy."

3 Steps to Prevent Oral Disease

The American Veterinary Dental Society recommends Pet-Parents follow these three steps to prevent oral disease:

Step 1: Take your pet to your veterinarian for a physical exam which includes a dental exam. They will determine if your pet has dental issues.

Step 2: Start a dental routine at home. It's best to brush when pets are young. Don't wait until your pet is an adult!

Step 3: Schedule regular wellness visits with your veterinarian. They can check your pet's overall wellness. Major organs can be susceptible to damage from dental disease, including the heart, liver, or kidneys!

Referral Rewards
